

Alpha blasts its way to the top!

With two workshops at the Australian Marine Complex (AMC) and another two in New South Wales, AlphaBlast has become a home grown success story.

AlphaBlast specialises in the provision of UHP water jetting, abrasive blasting and surface protection for the oil and gas, naval defence, marine and commercial industries.

In just two years, the company has undergone a rapid transformation from a small Perth-based business to an empire that includes a new blast and paint yard at the AMC.

AlphaBlast General Manager Kim Twiggs said the company's success was largely driven by a strong culture of innovation.

"AlphaBlast believes that investing in leading edge technologies helps the company to set new parameters, furthering our ability to provide clients with practical solutions," Mr Twiggs said.

"We made a decision to aim high and we are doing this. Our equipment has always been innovative and our new ventures will further enhance this position."

The new Abrasive Blast and Paint Yard on Sparks Road, features a separate blast booth and spray painting booth that will contain and filter fumes and debris.

Mr Twiggs said the new facility would allow the company to tender for high end work while creating a clean environment for AlphaBlast's staff.

"Our new facility will ensure our operations are clean so we can work to high end specifications," he said.

"Our contract with Linkweld to blast and paint deep water and shallow water spools for Woodside's Pluto project is testament to this."

The company has gained a high reputation for quality workmanship and has completed maintenance work on most of the Royal Australian Navy's HMAS fleet.

AlphaBlast is also expanding into the oil and gas sector undertaking projects such as a storage and processing facility and tank preservation for Chevron; a platform cluster, UHP Water Jetting and painting of a deck for Clough Amec/ConocoPhillips; and UHP Water Jetting, painting and cold cutting of a hull and deck for Coogee Resources.
